

Monitoring the implementation of seven-year plan and long-term development strategy of JINR

Strategic Plan for the Long-Term Development of JINR for the period up to 2030 and beyond, presented in November 2020, defines the principles for the formation of the next medium-term plans for the development of JINR. The JINR Strategy formulates a system of performance indicators for the Institute and provides for its application for monitoring its activities. The system of indicators and monitoring are a key tool for analyzing the progress of solving the tasks formulated in the current seven-year development plan and assessing the effectiveness of JINR's work in key areas of activity, and ensuring the compliance of the scientific, scientific, educational and innovative activities of the Institute with the most modern international standards, and its demand by the JINR Member States.

The scorecard consists of two groups of criteria. The first group characterizes the level of the Institute's ability to perceive, accumulate and produce scientific knowledge, develop research infrastructure, including virtual infrastructure, and strengthen the Institute's status as an international intergovernmental organization. The second group characterizes the current performance in the main areas of the Institute's activities: research and development of research infrastructure, technology creation, scientific and educational activities for the training of highly qualified personnel for the member states and partners of the Institute, exchange of scientific and technical information.

Each of these two groups contains the main indicators (top-level indicators) of three main types related to research and research infrastructure, the characterization of the Institute as an international intergovernmental organization, human resources and the current state of staff.

Monitoring of the main indicators is provided by the indicators of the lower level, a detailed system of characteristics, parameters and indicators, approved upon adoption of the next seven-year plan for the development of JINR and adjusted on an annual basis. The system of indicators and monitoring will be applied starting from 2022.
